

After the Harvest service on Thursday 10th October, Peter McCann, a CAFOD volunteer, led a workshop called "a zero hero" in Year 5. The theme of the workshop was climate change and the devastating effects this is having on our world. The children were given cards to sort into different categories: things that cause climate change, effects of climate change and things that help to stop climate change. Once they had sorted the cards in pairs, they went through the definitions of words, for example, renewable energy and they then discussed which category they fitted into.

Towards the end of the workshop, Peter encouraged the children to think about the term "net zero". They had to create a small poster stating ways that they could try to reduce emissions.

Year 5 had a thoroughly enjoyable workshop with Peter.
